Things that bless me:

Reflections From A Founder

The "a-ha" moments when a student who has previously been struggling and they finally "get it." For example, a new flute student who worked for 2-3 weeks just to get her first sound, finally, with smiles, gets a huge sound that flows from her instrument for the first time.

The proud parents as they see their child find something that they become passionate about. We have students that previously had no clue what the names of instruments were, who now treasure the inanimate object in their hands that they have learned to make "sing."

A group of students who previously did not know each other, learn to work together for one common accomplishment. Our performing groups are mostly made up of strangers. Yet, they have learned to work together to make beautiful music and thrill audiences. This semester, they are even learning to lead others to worship.

These are things I have seen around our campus this semester. These are things that fill my heart with love for TFAI and for those who have chosen to be students here. I sincerely believe we are on the cusp of something so wonderful and exciting that the future is unfathomable. Thank you students and parents for participating in this endeavor.
