Class Description: This early childhood class is designed to provide experimental opportunities for young children to connect STEAM to the natural world. The natural world offers an endless variety of STEAM (science, technology, engineering, art, and math) high-interest nature experiences for children. Students will observe real-life phenomena and engage all of their senses in the learning process to explore natural objects such as apples, pumpkins, leaves, water, pollinators, and flowers. Children in Natural STEAM will build a solid foundation with intellectually inviting natural materials to foster learning through play and exploration while developing literacy, numeracy, social-emotional skills, problem solving, fine and gross motor development, cognitive development, creative development, and language development. Weekly lessons will focus on inquiry-based, hands-on learning, allowing children to develop skills like curiosity, creativity, and resilience in a relaxed, developmentally appropriate environment.
